SHARING ADVENTURES IN GENEALOGY: INTERVIEWS WITH MEMBERS OF THE GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF WASHTENAW COUNTY
(Part Four)

By Marcia McCrary

In this issue of Capers, we are asking genealogy-related questions of three members of the GSWC. Selected to be interviewed for this issue were Matthew McCormack, Linda Williams and Omer Jean Winborn.

Question: When did you start researching your ancestors and what made you interested in genealogy?

Matthew McCormack: I feel as though I have been doing genealogy as long as I can remember, but likely it started in earnest while in middle school. My great-grandmother was still alive and had been in her same home for several generations. Lots of heirlooms were passed down and discussed in our family. I was fortunate enough to have all four grandparents alive and was 32 when my first grandfather died. All four grandparents lived to be 90 and beyond, a wonderful resource!

Linda Williams: I could have been much further along and have more clues to my ancestors but, at age 17, I wasn't so interested in dead folk. My mother had sounded me out then and realized I wasn't going to focus on people I wasn't likely to meet any time soon. When I did start thinking about it was when my daughters gifted me with a gift of Ancestry for a year. That really opened the floodgates of exploration. I already had a map of my more immediate relatives back to my great-grandfather on my mother's side. One of my uncles had gotten living relatives to supply names, dates of birth, marriages, and deaths for their part of the family. He promised everyone a copy of the data he collected. It was so welcome to others in my rather sprawling family. I was the eighth child of a woman who was the seventh of eight children, so we already had a small village within the family. Uncle Convis was very detail oriented and gave us a gift of accuracy and comprehensive information in the data set.

Omer Jean Winborn: My parents watched my daughter while I went to work and graduate school. I was exhausted that day I came to pick her up. I dropped my books down on the floor of my parents' screened-in porch. Books went everywhere. My father looked at the books and then said to me, "I wonder if they can teach an old man like me how to read." I said, "of course". I wanted to find out who my dad was! Both my parents were sharecroppers, came North during the Great Migration and had successfully raised six children, all college graduates. I found my father in the most recent census at the time, which was 1920, so I have been doing research for about 40 years.

Question: What is the most surprising thing you've discovered in researching your genealogy? How did that discovery affect the way you view genealogy and did it have an effect on your attitude toward research?

Matthew McCormack: Most surprises have come while working for genealogy clients—things involving parents and grandparents who turn out not to be biological, adoptions and sometimes criminal issues. These require a soft touch and a well thought out method of delivering this information to the client.

Linda Williams: I was most surprised to find that my early two closest matches were adoptees who had no idea who their parents were. I was surprised by this as, in our family, it was intimated those happenings do not occur. Well, not only did they occur, they were on both sides of my family. The other really amazing thing was to find the family of my great-grandmother who, along with her twin sister, were adopted by a couple who had no natural children. I discovered that the adoption was either much more open than what we see now or was done under greater financial stressors during the Civil War era. The twins were given up by a widow whose husband had been killed on his way home after release from a Confederate prison camp at the end of the war. Their [birth] mother was holding the fort at home with a farm and two other children to handle. One child was older and male, the other child was a younger sister. I was motivated to help my first two adoptee surprise matches find our shared family history after realizing how important it was to my grandmother and her twin to connect with their birth family members. I feel it is a pivotal point to know for certain what one's own beginnings are. It is a grounding of ourselves and builds confidence and direction in reaching further back into our deeper roots.

Omer Jean Winborn: The most surprising thing I have discovered is: my family participated in every war in this country, including the Revolutionary War, they were participants in the Underground Railroad and many were very famous and well known and documented in history. I have a totally different view and a different look at history as it applies to me and my ancestors. I am hooked! I wanted to learn more. I joined the Genealogical Society of Washtenaw County in 1998 and then Fred Hart Williams Genealogical Society in 1999.

Question: In the time you've been doing genealogy what is the worst brick wall you've encountered? Have you yet been able to work through it or around it? If so how did you get "unstuck".

Matthew McCormack: So many brick walls! I will use a newspaper article saved in my grandfather's wallet (date and newspaper unknown) for many years to explain how I often get unstuck. "PERSISTENCE. Nothing in the world can take the place of persistence. Talent will not. Nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not. Unrewarded genius is almost a proverb. Education will not. The world is full of educated derelicts. Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent."

Linda Williams: My most intransigent brick wall is the family of my 3rd great-grandmother Julia Ann(a) Hawley. I have her father's name (Samuel Hawley), his date of birth and the name of a town where they lived in western New York (Clarendon, Orleans, New York, USA). Part of the wall is that GGGreat-Grandfather Winslow P. Sheldon didn't live in the area long before moving to Paw Paw, Michigan. Ancestry has no useful hints so far for either Julia or her father. In an online copy of a book, I found one reference to Samuel having property near my 3rd great-grandfather. This will likely be resolved using land records (not my strong suit) and I still have some bits of information that might prove to be useful in teasing out more information on this branch of the Hawley tree. I plan to explore a Hawley family genealogy to see if I can find more useful clues.

Omer Jean Winborn: My brick walls have been finding my enslaved ancestors. There are so many tools available today that were not available when I first started. My breakthrough has been DNA and the internet.

Question: Tell us about your most gloriously successful moment in researching your genealogy.

Matthew McCormack: There are so many it is hard to remember them all. I have been researching and writing for clients for over 20 years, the look on a client's face the moment you hand them a book about their own family is priceless.

Linda Williams: Finding records of my grandmother's earliest moments (baptism record) in the Drouin Collection was my most exciting find. I also found the baptisms of all her siblings, as well as their parents' wedding record. Grandmother's siblings were all baptized by their great-uncle, a missionary minister in the Presbyterian Church sent to Georgetown (now Howlick), Quebec, Canada from Scotland to serve the Scottish enclave that settled there. The original wooden first church was replaced by a brick building that is still standing today. The graves of several related family members buried behind the church have markers that gave breadth to that part of my family lines.

Omer Jean Winborn: My successful moment was, after 40 years of a friendship and knowing my friend Cheryl Garnett's wonderful history, I learned that her history was part of my history because we discovered we are cousins through DNA matches.
